

The Best Places to Eat Pennsylvania Dutch Pie

Good 'N Plenty Restaurant moderate

Good 'N Plenty is housed in a two-story farmhouse built in 1871; the large "Dutch room" (main restaurant area) was added a century later to accommodate the customers lined up out the door for Christ and Dolly Lapp's delicious home-cooked Pennsylvania Dutch dinners. They still run the restaurant with their children and grandchildren. Dining is family-style, with tables seating 10 to 12 people. Once the tables are full, the platters start coming, laden with such favorites as crispy fried chicken, baked country ham, roast beef, mashed potatoes, baked country sausage, pork and sauerkraut, noodles, chow chow (a traditional relish), pepper cabbage, homemade bread, and more, followed by shoo-fly pie and other scrumptious desserts. No wonder it's been rated one of the best down-home dining spots in the country. And there's plenty more in the Bake Shop and Store, where you can buy freshly baked pies, cakes, and breads, and jars of apple butter or homemade chow chow to take home.

150 Eastbrook Road, Smoketown; open 11:30 AM–8 PM Mon–Sat; closed Christmas, Jan and early Feb; www.goodnplenty.com

Also in Lancaster County

You won't find a setting much more authentic than Stoltzfus Farm Restaurant (www.stoltzfusfarmrestaurant.com; moderate) in Gordonville for a Pennsylvania Dutch country meal. It's served in the Amish farmhouse where Amos Stoltzfus grew up. The family-style menu includes homemade hamloaf and homemade sausage, made in their own butcher's shop right on the farm, accompanied by candied sweet potatoes, brown buttered noodles, and many other country favorites, along with shoo-fly, cherry, and apple pies.

Also in the US

There are Amish communities scattered across 22 states of the US. Two of the largest are in northern Indiana and southeast Iowa. At Das Dutchman Essenhaus Restaurant and Bakery (www.essenhaus.com; inexpensive) in Middlebury, Indiana, large tables fill the rustic wood-paneled dining room, where family-style dining features old Amish recipes passed down through generations. The restaurant serves 30 kinds of pie; if you can't choose, take some home from the bakery next door. In Amana, Iowa, the family-run Ox Yoke Inn (www.oxyokeinn.com; moderate) has been a local favorite since 1940. It serves traditional old-world recipes, family-style or à la carte, using produce from neighboring farms and smokehouses. A tray of fresh-baked desserts is presented at the end of your meal.

Above The dark, sticky filling of shoo-fly, made from rich sorghum molasses and brown sugar, makes this pie a local favorite

Left Amish quilts are renowned worldwide for their quality and distinctive patterns, often contrasting bright colors with black