Oxygen Group

Many life forms depend on oxygen for survival, even in coral reefs under the sea – where fish, plants, and tiny animals called corals take in oxygen mixed into the water. Sulfur and selenium are also important for life, but the other group members are not. In fact, radioactive polonium is the deadliest element of all.