

Colourful flames

When alkaline earth metals react with oxygen in the air, they burn and release energy in the form of light and heat. Each member of this group burns with a distinctive, coloured flame. Magnesium produces a particularly bright white flame (pictured right).

Magnesium powder produces the bright white sparkles of fireworks.

Fireworks display at Sydney Harbour
Bridge, Australia

