

INSIDE THE HEART

The heart has four chambers. The lower two (the ventricles) have thicker muscle walls than the upper two (the atria). The septum, also mostly muscle, divides the heart's two sides. The atria receive blood from all parts of the body; the ventricles pump blood into circulation.