

- Sit on an inflatable ring.
- Apply a cooling gel or ice pack.
- Take a warm bath or spray water on your stitches in the shower.

BURPING YOUR BABY

Once your baby has fed, air bubbles in their stomach need to rise to the top, and you can help this happen by burping them. Sit them on your lap or hold them upright against your shoulder. You don't need to rub or pat them, but this often feels right and babies seem to like it! Burp halfway through a feeding and again at the end, especially for bottle-fed babies, since air fills up the stomach, slows down the feeding, and makes a baby more likely to vomit.
