

As part of the health examination, the doctor will do a series of physical checks, such as checking head control and the baby's reflexes.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Is it true that I don't need to worry about getting pregnant again while I'm breast-feeding? If you are breastfeeding, you may not have a period for a while after giving birth. Although this means you are less likely to conceive, you can still ovulate, so you shouldn't assume that you don't need to use contraception. The doctor will discuss contraception and sexual health with you and may recommend the progesterone-only pill, which can be prescribed from 21 days if you're breastfeeding.

I'm bottle-feeding my baby and am worried about getting pregnant again. How soon could this happen? If you are bottle-feeding, you will probably have had your first period prior to this
