

ASK A DOCTOR

I'm fairly sure I've ovulated. Do we need to keep having sex to make sure I conceive? Even if you've been tracking your ovulation by monitoring your temperature or cervical mucus, or by using an ovulation kit, you can't be sure exactly when it occurred.

Since the fertile window is several days, continue having sex for at least a couple of days after what you think is your most fertile time. Also, it's good to stay intimate at the times you're not trying to conceive.

Remember also that abstinence doesn't usually have the hoped-for effect of banking up and improving the quantity and quality of sperm. In fact, the opposite may happen (see Sexual positions).