

If you're over 35 and have been trying to conceive for six months, speak to your doctor about fertility tests. You should both go for checkups because your partner's sperm will need to be tested too.

ASK A DOCTOR

I did an early pregnancy test and have failed to conceive again, for the sixth month. Could it be because I have irregular periods? Menstrual cycles that vary significantly in length from month to month are considered irregular. An irregular cycle can be troublesome when trying to conceive, but being aware of the signs of ovulation may help you determine when you are approaching your short window of fertility.

Irregular ovulation and menstruation account for around 30–40 percent of fertility problems. Many factors determine how fertile a woman is, such as her age, whether her cervical fluid is wet