

Regular exercise will increase your base metabolic rate, which is the rate at which your body burns calories. During pregnancy, your metabolism will already be slightly elevated. When you exercise, your body naturally uses energy stored in your organs and muscles, but your body will keep enough reserve energy to facilitate the growth of your baby. Exercise will also help your body regulate blood sugar (see Know your carbs) and energy levels.