Early vaginal scans do not show a great deal of detail. The sonographer waits until the embryo is in the correct position (above left) to be measured.

ASK A NUTRITIONIST

Since being pregnant, I don't have much of an appetite. Is this normal? It is common to not want to eat food, especially if you are suffering from morning sickness. You may no longer be able to stomach your favorite foods, but it's important to eat when you can. Try eating smaller meals, perhaps cold options if cooking smells turn your stomach. Yogurt-based smoothies and chunky soups are nutritious. Always drink plenty.

Vitamin D helps your body absorb calcium, which is vital for the development of your unborn baby's skeleton. You can boost your vitamin D levels through exposure to the sun and by eating eggs, oily fish, and red meat. But it is also recommended that all pregnant women take a 400 IU vitamin D supplement daily.
