

Your appetite is likely to change when you are pregnant and craving foods you don't usually eat is normal.

FOCUS ON PARTNERS

If it's your partner's responsibility to play host to the baby for nine months, it most definitely falls to you to see that your partner gets everything she needs. A word of warning: cravings usually occur the minute the local store has closed, or in the evening when you're relaxing. Forget the pickles and ice cream you've been told to expect. Instead, be prepared for a last-minute dash to the local pizza place, a trek to a 24-hour supermarket that carries organic sour-cream-and-onion-flavored potato chips, beets, or a chocolate doughnut.

Help by honing your cooking skills and preparing nutritious meals and snacks you can both enjoy. Your partner will appreciate your lovingly prepared meals and it may mean less temptation to eat unhealthy foods.

ASK A NUTRITIONIST