

to fluctuating hormones, and it is not uncommon to have severe headaches with prolonged computer use. Headaches are often worse in the first trimester. This could be due to eye strain and the fact that you are immobile, which can cause tension. Take even more breaks from your computer screen now that you're pregnant. You'll probably find you need more bathroom breaks anyway. If this doesn't help, ask if you can do tasks that don't require computer use for a short time. Drink plenty of water, too, as you work as dehydration can cause headaches.
