

Your baby is looking more human and fully formed every day, with well-developed facial features and limbs—and he may even get the hiccups.

GOOD FATS

Fat is an important nutrient that provides energy as well as vitamins A, D, E, and K. A balanced diet should include fats, but opt for the good fats whenever you can.

Fats tend to be made up of a mixture of different types of fatty acids; some are saturated, others unsaturated. In general, unsaturated fats, which are more prevalent in plant oils and seed oils, are better for heart health than saturated fats. Avocados, nuts, and seeds are a good source of unsaturated fatty acids.

Unsaturated fats are further split into monounsaturated and polyunsaturated fats, and it is better to prioritize monounsaturated fats, such as olive oil, over polyunsaturated fats, such as sunflower or soy spreads, because we have a sufficient amount of these in our diet. Also some polyunsaturated fats called omega-6 compete with the essential fatty acids found in omega-3 (see The power of omega-3).