

As your abdominal organs become ever more compressed, you may suffer from frequent digestive disturbances, such as heartburn or trapped gas.

The inner ear organs have matured enough to send nerve signals to the brain. Soon, the baby will start responding to many more sounds.

The umbilical cord may be held in your baby's hands as he floats in the amniotic cavity.

Kicks are becoming quite strong and there's no mistaking your baby's movements.

At 23 weeks the average crown to heel length is 11.4 in (28.9 cm) and the average weight is 1.1 lb (501 g).
