

As your belly continues to get bigger it may put pressure on your ribs and diaphragm.

A jellylike fluid in the coiling umbilical cord prevents it from becoming compressed as the baby twists and turns.

Fine lanugo hairs cover the baby's body. Most will disappear before the birth, but a few may still be seen on the baby's back when he is born.

The brain continues to get bigger and its surface is beginning to take on the creases and folds seen in mature brains.

At 29 weeks the average crown to heel length is 15.2 in (38.6 cm) and the average weight is 2.5 lb (1.2 kg).