

There are four hormones at work during the menstrual cycle: FSH (follicle-stimulating hormone) causes the egg follicles to start developing in the ovary; oestrogen is produced by the developing egg and peaks just before ovulation; LH (luteinizing hormone) triggers ovulation; and progesterone thickens the lining of the uterus.

