

Bear in mind that every situation and every company is different. You should let your company know of your decision as soon as possible. Make an appointment with your human resources representative to discuss your company's policies so you have plenty of time to think about your options. Also keep in mind that if your company lets you take vacation or sick days that you haven't yet accrued as part of your leave, they may ask you to reimburse them for those days if you're not returning to work.

This happens quite often, and your boss may not be surprised to hear that you're not returning to work. If you're not 100 percent certain about not returning to work, it may be a good idea to ask your employer about coming back to work on a part-time basis or working from home.