YOUR BABY TODAY

A close-up of the baby's face clearly showing the lip shape and slightly separated eyelids. The slight shadowing seen to the left of the image is from the wall of the uterus, which at this stage of the pregnancy will always be very close to your baby.

“ If you’ve made the decision to have a home birth, you’ll need to ensure you’re fully prepared in good time. ”

Women had their babies at home for generations; it was only in the 20th century that women began to have hospital births. If you're considering a home birth, remember that the majority of pregnancies and births are normal and do not need any medical intervention.

Be reassured that if you have decided to have a home birth and then change your mind, for example you decide you want an epidural, or your midwife advises you that the baby needs help, you will be transferred to a hospital.
