

Bear in mind that the health professionals are trying to provide care for the person who needs it the most—namely your partner. If you want to be heard, it's a good idea to write down any questions that you may have before you meet with health professionals. Labor nurses will make every effort to help you feel involved and assist you in supporting your partner.

Try to keep in mind that the most important relationship your partner has is with you, and that a positive attitude on your part can make a substantial difference to your partner's pregnancy and birth. Do your best to be patient and persistent but not pushy.