YOUR BABY TODAY

A 3-D close-up of the hand shows the skin folds. Just as fingerprints are unique, so are the deeper skin folds seen on the hands and feet. The grasp reflex is strong and your baby will start to grasp anything that touches the palm of their hand.

“Your baby will benefit from extra time in the uterus, but their development is almost complete and they’re now “full term.” ”

There is now less space for your baby to move and they will soon, if they hasn't already, settle down into a comfortable head-down position. The shape of the uterus encourages this head-down position and, once in it, turning would be a major effort for your baby. Plenty of amniotic fluid remains to cushion and protect your baby, who will still be attempting to be active in this more confined space.

Your baby's behavior is now exactly the same as a newborn: they'll turn toward light and yawn just as much as a newborn, and they'll continue to practice breathing the amniotic fluid in and out with regular rhythmical movements.
