

95 percent of babies don't arrive on their due date—of these, 25 percent come early and 70 percent late.

There's a 5-week window (37–42 weeks) of pregnancy that's regarded as normal and safe for a baby to be born. Due to recent evidence, however, elective delivery before 39 weeks is not recommended.

Five weeks is a long time to wait, so put a message on your voice mail along the lines of “We’ll be in touch as soon as the baby’s here.” Keep busy: have your hair done, catch up with friends, and, most importantly, get some sleep!
