11 days to go

YOUR BABY TODAY

This image demonstrates how your baby has laid down fat reserves, nicely rounding out the cheeks. In these final weeks, your baby will continue to grow in the uterus, although at a slower rate than previously.

“ If you’re having a home birth, you can make the midwife’s task as easy as possible by being well organized. ”

If you’re having your baby at home, spend this week ensuring that everything is in order and that the room in which you plan to give birth is clean, comfortable, and adequately heated.

Your midwife may bring around a pack about now, which contains all the items they will need. To make their task easier, make sure the bed on which you’re going to deliver (if you plan to use a bed) is easily accessible from all sides. You might also want to ensure you have plenty of extra pillows on hand as well as several changes of bed sheets.

Even if you plan to labor in dim lighting, remember that there needs to be a good source of light for the midwife, especially after the birth when you may need to have stitches.
