

Living tubes

Arteries have thick, muscular walls to cope with the high pressure created when the heart pumps blood. Microscopic capillaries make deliveries to individual cells. Thin-walled veins carry blood under low pressure back to the heart.

