

Exchanging gases

Blood flowing through the capillaries (tiny blood vessels) surrounding the alveoli constantly picks up oxygen and carries it to the body's cells. At the same time, it dumps carbon dioxide into the alveoli to be breathed out.

