

SWALLOWING

The tongue shapes the chewed food and saliva into a ball, called a bolus, and pushes it toward the throat.

When the food touches the back of the throat a reflex action squeezes the bolus into the esophagus.