

“BEAUTY WILL RESULT FROM THE FORM AND THE CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WHOLE...”

Andrea Palladio, from Four Books of Architecture, 1570

THE MANILA GALLEON was one of the most distinctive elements of Spain's New World trading system. From the 1570s, three galleons (two after 1593) made an annual round-trip between Acapulco in Mexico and Manila in the Philippines. In return for New World silver, Spain imported silks, spices, porcelain, lacquerware, and ivory. It is estimated that by 1600 the value of a single cargo of these ships—the largest in the world—exceeded the entire annual revenue of the English crown.

In 1571, the Portuguese attempted to colonize Angola, but the Kimbundu people proved impossible to subdue, the soil of the coast was too poor to cultivate, and the salt trade could not be wrested from African control. They did establish trading forts at Luanda and Benguela in 1575 and 1587, boosting their slave trade.

The Battle of Lepanto, fought off the coast of western Greece in October 1571, was the last major engagement between galleys—with 208 Christian galleys against 251 Ottoman. The Christian fleet, commanded by Don Juan of Austria, illegitimate son of Charles V, triumphed, largely through its artillery. Although the Christians failed in the wider goal to retake Cyprus, the threat of Ottoman expansion in the western Mediterranean was ended.

Battle of Lepanto

An estimated 20,000 Ottomans and 7,500 Christians died at the Battle of Lepanto. The ramming tactics of the Ottoman galleys proved ineffective.

DESPITE THE SPANISH CONQUEST of Inca Peru (see 1532), a remnant Inca state was set up in the Upper Amazon in 1539 under a minor Inca noble, Manco Inca Yupanqui, in a small settlement, Vilcabamba. From here, he and his descendants waged an intermittent, generally ineffective campaign against the Spanish. In 1572, Vilcabamba was overrun and the last Inca leader, Túpac Amaru, was executed.

In 1566, a delegation of Dutch nobles appeared before Margaret of Parma (1522–86), half-sister of Philip II and governor-general of the Netherlands, objecting to Philip's drive against heresy in the Netherlands. They were referred to contemptuously by one of Margaret's counselors as “gueux”—“beggars.” The name was enthusiastically taken up by the protesting Dutch, particularly the Sea Beggars, privateers (or pirates) whose raids on Spanish shipping from 1568 significantly hampered Spain's military efforts. The Sea Beggars depended to a considerable extent on support from England, discreetly doing what it could to disrupt the Spanish. But in the spring of 1572, Elizabeth I (see 1586–89), anxious not to offend Spain too obviously, closed English harbors to them. In response, in a more or less desperate gamble, on April 1, 1572 the Sea Beggars seized Brill, Holland. Within three months they had taken practically every town in Zeeland and Holland, purging them of royalists and Catholics. William of Orange (1533–84), politically and military the most significant figure in the Revolt, agreed to take command of them. Rebellion had turned to open war.

The massacre of Huguenots in Paris on August 24, 1572, St. Bartholomew's Day, was the worst atrocity of the French Wars of Religion. It stemmed from an attempt to resolve the wars by a marriage. Henry of Navarre, a leading Huguenot close to the succession of the French throne, was to wed Marguerite of Valois, sister of the young French king, Charles IX. This was largely brokered by the king's mother, Catherine de Medici (see panel, right) who, as fearful for her son's throne as she was alarmed by growing Huguenot power, had nonetheless persistently sought to bring the warring factions to terms. In this overheated atmosphere, Catholics and Huguenots descended on Paris for the marriage. However, there was a plot to assassinate the Huguenot's dominant figure, Gaspard de Coligny. Who was behind it remains uncertain. In

The European conquest of the Incas was devastating. Imported European diseases, rather than deliberate genocide, were the chief culprit.
