

Tea China

According to legend, tea was first made from tea leaves in China in 2737 BCE.

Iris France

The bell-shaped flowers of this Chilean vine bloom between March and May.

Chilean bellflower
Chile

This flower inspired the fleur-de-lis symbol, used by the kings of France.

Rose England

The rose was a symbol of royalty in England and later became the national flower.

The cone-shaped center holds the growing seeds.

Purple lavender flowers grow on spikes and appear across Portugal in the summer.

Lavender Portugal

In Portugal, lavender was believed to ward off evil spirits.

Lotus India

The lotus is the sacred symbol of India, and represents purity and grace.

across southern Australia as a sign of spring. The national flower of Bhutan, the Himalayan blue poppy, is so rare that it was once believed to be a myth and is called the "blue yeti." The national tree of Canada, the syrup-producing maple tree, is found in each of its provinces, and its leaf features on the Canadian flag. The country that comes to mind when you say "tea" is China, the first to brew the hot drink from the plant's leaves—and the world's biggest producer today. In India, the national flower is the lotus. Hindu gods are often shown standing on this sacred flower.