

SPACE GARDEN Over millions of years of evolution, plants have become perfectly adapted for life on Earth. They are most certainly not adapted to growing in space, yet that is exactly what the plants shown here are doing. As part of an experiment on the International Space Station (ISS), its crew members are growing fresh vegetables in a “space garden” to try to improve their diet.