

A glimpse of the past

From 1881, Bodie's population began to decline as people moved away. By 1915, most of the townsfolk had left, and in 1962 the now almost deserted town was declared a California State Historic Park. This means that the 100 or so buildings still standing today give unique insights into the lives of the people who had been living there.

1 The Dechambeau Hotel is one of Bodie's few brick-built buildings. In 1880 it served as the town's post office.

2 Bodie's busiest road, Main Street, going left to right, meets Green Street, running up and down, at this intersection.

3 This building was once Bodie's schoolhouse. Pupils were taught here until 1942. The original desks still stand in rows inside.

Immigrants from Asia

Several hundred Chinese people lived in Bodie, in an area known as "Chinatown." Many ran mule trains—packs of mules that carried in the wood used to heat Bodie's stoves.
