This store clerk has to climb a ladder to reach the upper shelves.

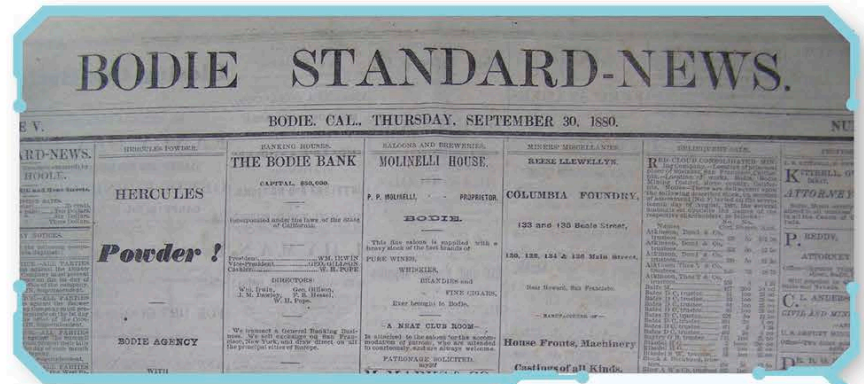

Goods like flour and sugar were stored in barrels.

Medicine

In many towns, the general store also functioned as a pharmacy. Boone's stocked medicines that promised to cure things like headaches, hay fever, indigestion, and even baldness.

The Bodie Standard-News was one of Bodie's six newspapers. It published stories from around the town, advertisements, and news about local businesses. In a world without television or radio, newspapers were often the only way that townsfolk could stay informed of the latest news.

The driver's seat was out in the open air. He sometimes had an armed guard next to him for protection.

Intercity transportation

Stagecoaches connected Bodie to the wider world. They picked up and dropped off mail and carried passengers to and from other cities. Coaches also carried bullion bars, a mixture of gold and silver from Bodie's mines, to mints where they would be processed into coins.
