

Strolling on deck

Most of the top four decks were for the exclusive use of first-class guests. On "A" deck, passengers could enjoy the sea breeze along an open-air walkway. Part of it was covered, so strolls could be taken even when the weather was poor.

The glass dome allowed natural light to flood into the Grand Staircase.

5 The elevator transporting first-class passengers from the promenade to the lower decks will soon be flooded.

The Grand Staircase

Titanic's Grand Staircase was the ship's centerpiece. It led all the way from the first-class promenade deck to the dining saloon on "D" deck. Lavishly decorated with solid oak panels, brass fittings, and crystal lighting, the staircase was topped by a huge glass and wrought-iron dome.

6 Waiters continue serving drinks to passengers who have decided to stay on board.

Privileged passengers

Those traveling in first class had a greater chance of surviving the disaster than others on board. Only 30% of those in first class lost their lives, compared to about 66% of the other classes and crew members.

Lady Duff-Gordon escaped on Lifeboat 1 with just 11 others. There was space for 40 people in the boat.
