

PREPARING A TOMB

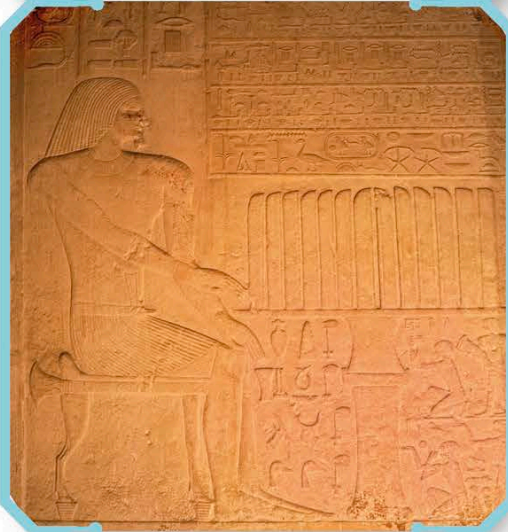

To the east of Khufu's Great Pyramid, work is underway on an important new construction—a flat-topped mastaba tomb for Khufukhaf I, son of Pharaoh Khufu and brother to Pharaoh Khafre. Khufukhaf is a member of the royal family, so his tomb is being constructed by expert craftsmen.

Brightly colored paint has been applied to these finished carvings, bringing them to life.

Life story

Carvings on the walls of the tomb depict scenes from Khufukhaf's life. Here he is shown receiving offerings for his use in the afterlife. The carvings are plain now, but would originally have been painted in bright colors.

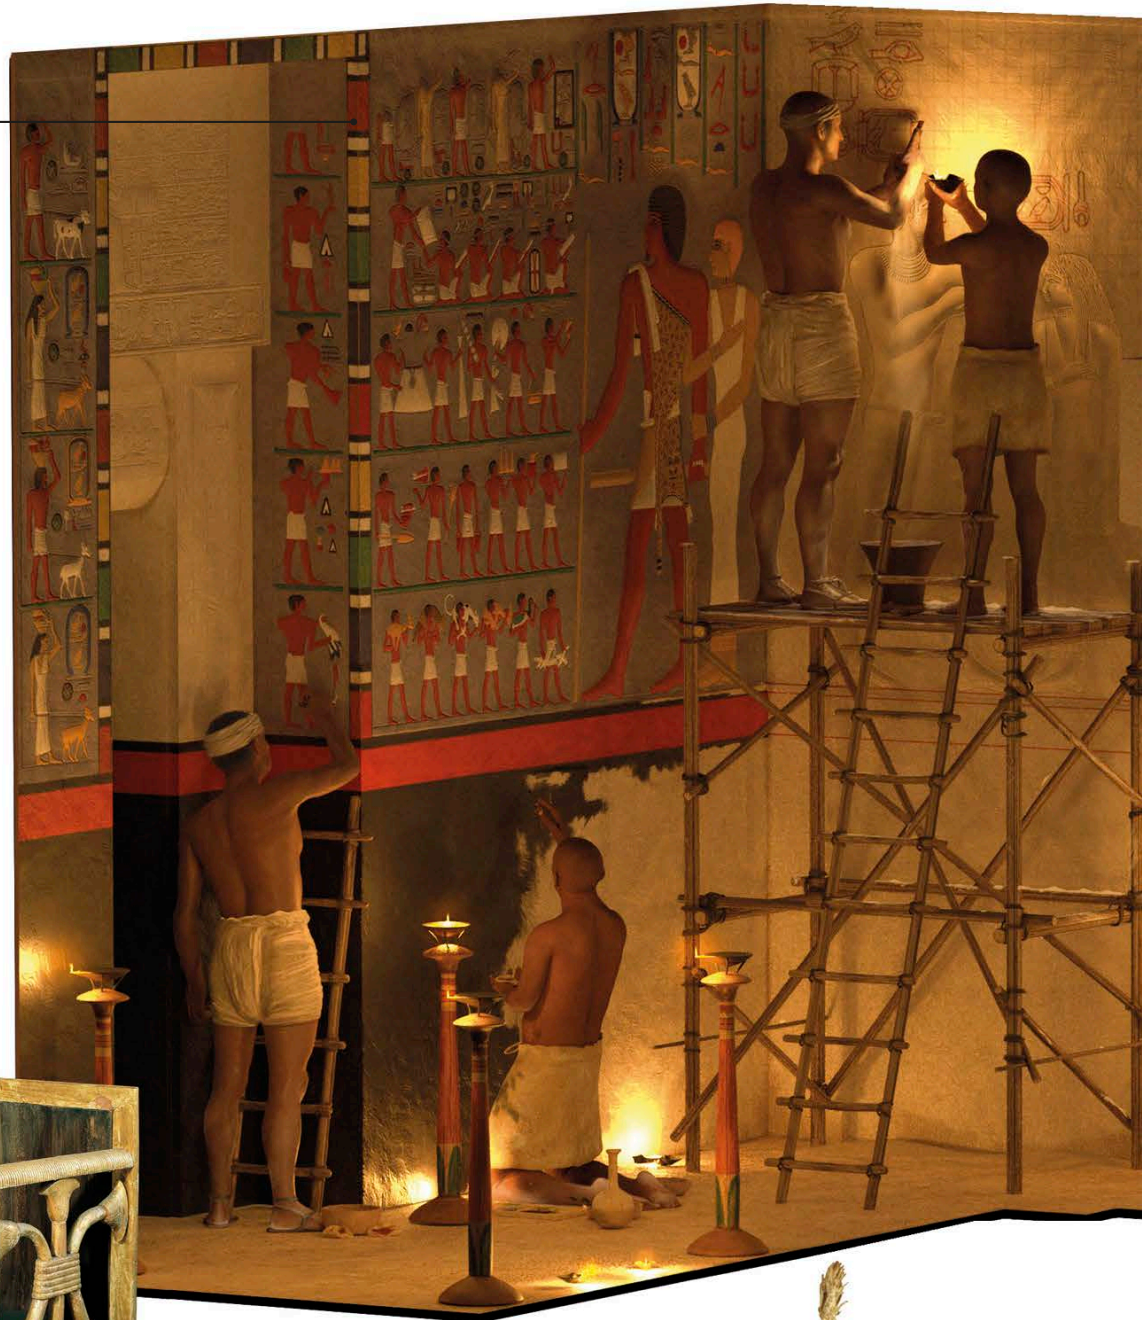

Goods for the afterlife

Tombs were filled with everything the dead person might need in the afterlife. This included clothing, furniture, food, and jewelry. Ordinary people had simple grave goods, while royalty had the finest things available.

Gold chair buried with Queen Hetepheres I

Working by oil lamp

Egyptians used lamps made from bowls filled with oil, with a twist of linen for the wick. Tomb artists generally used plant oils, such as sesame and castor, and added salt to stop the oil from smoking and spoiling the paintings.

