

5 The most important guests sit with the lord and lady at the raised top table.

Fabulous food

Food presentation was key on feast days. A pig's head served with apples was considered a delicacy. Exotic birds such as swans and peacocks would be cooked and then dressed in their own feathers. Pies and soups were decorated and colored with spices such as yellow saffron, which was very expensive.

Tapestry

Thick woven tapestries were hung on the castle walls. They kept rooms a little warmer and less drafty. With bright colors and intricate designs, they were also beautiful to look at and often told a story. The famous tapestry shown below, which hangs in a museum in Paris, depicts a story of a lady and a unicorn.

6 Less important guests sit at lower side tables. They eat brown bread and drink from pewter cups, while the top table has white bread and cups made of precious metal or glass.

7 A jester capers around between the tables, trying to make the guests laugh.
