

The heat of the Sun drives currents in the atmosphere that constantly carry air and moisture around the globe. This creates the climates and weather of the world.

