

WINTER CHILL

Most penguins nest on land, but emperors breed on the floating sea ice close to Antarctica. The penguins incubate their eggs through the bitter winter, huddling together for warmth. This ensures that the chicks hatch in spring, just as the weather improves. Here, a colony of adults and semigrown chicks battles the elements.

