

VITAL LIGHT

Tropical coral reefs are fueled by sunlight shining down through the clear, shallow water. The light gives algae the energy they need to turn water and carbon dioxide into sugar, creating the food that supports all the corals, reef fish, clams, shrimps, and other animals in one of the richest ecosystems on the planet.

