

1709

AFGHAN UPRISING

In 1709, Mirwais Hotak (1673–1715) freed Loy Kandahar (Greater Kandahar) in southern Afghanistan from its Persian Safavid rulers. Hotak's dynasty went on to rule an area that included Afghanistan, Iran, and western Pakistan until 1738, when Persia's new ruler, Nadir Shah Afshar, reconquered Kandahar.

“Let the path of the pure prevail all over the world.”

GOBIND SINGH, c. 1699

△ Mausoleum of Mirwais Hotak, Kandahar

1714

1709 The Great Frost affects Western Europe; icebergs are seen in the North Sea

1710 The first European porcelain is produced at Meissen in Germany

BRITAIN'S SLAVE TRADE EXPLODES

In 1713, Spain awarded Britain a contract to send 4,800 enslaved Africans to Spanish America every year for 30 years. This, along with the opening up of Africa to all English merchants in 1698 and increasing demand for labour for the New World's sugar plantations, helped Britain become the dominant slave-trading nation in the 18th century. Between 1640 and 1807, Britain transported an estimated 3.1 million enslaved Africans, creating wealth for the port cities of London, Bristol, and Liverpool.

1713

△ A Liverpool-based slave ship

▷ Shackles from the slave ship Amistad