ZULUS DEFEAT THE BRITISH AT ISANDLWANA

In January 1879, the British invaded Zululand after the king, Cetshwayo ka Mpande, refused to disband his army and join a federation of British colonies in South Africa. On 22 January, 20,000

Zulus attacked the British camp near Isandlwana, killing over 1300.

Shocked by the Zulus' discipline and fighting skill, the British began a more aggressive campaign against them.

REALISM

Realism was an artistic movement that sought to represent truthfully the everyday experience of people's lives.

1879 The “father of realism” Henrik Ibsen publishes A Doll's House, his controversial portrayal of women's lives in a male-dominated society.

1880 Emile Zola outlines the elements of a “naturalist” novel, embracing determinism, scientific objectivism, and social commentary.

1896 Giacomo Puccini premieres La Bohème, a “Verismo” (Italian: “realism”) opera, marked by plots with everyday characters.

1898 Konstantin Stanislavski creates method acting, encouraging actors to identify with a character's inner motivation and emotions.
