

The Berlin Wall was built to prevent East German citizens from defecting to the West. After a mistaken report on 9 November 1989 that border restrictions were being removed, demonstrators flocked to the wall and soon began knocking down this symbol of oppression.

