

36–40 weeks

At the end of pregnancy your baby is on average 20½ in (51.2 cm)—similar to a medium-sized watermelon. Your fundal height peaks at about 36 weeks and measures 14 in (36 cm). You might find that your belly is a bit of a burden at this stage since it makes simple tasks tricky.

WATERMELON

PUBIS

17–21 weeks Your baby is roughly the size of a mango at this point of gestation. Your uterus has grown upward and is now level with the height of your belly button. As your belly becomes more visible people might start to notice that you're pregnant, they might even want to touch your belly.

MANGO

27–30 weeks Your baby is now about the size of a squash. Your fundal height at 30 weeks is 12 in (30 cm). The wall of the uterus is muscular and during pregnancy it enlarges to many times its original dimension. By 30 weeks it has tripled in size.

SQUASH