

In her laboratory

A lifetime of exposure to radiation took its toll on Marie. Despite battling a blood disease caused by radiation, she worked up to her death in France at the age of 66.

“A scientist in his laboratory is not a mere technician: he is also a child confronting natural phenomena that impress him as though they were fairy tales.”

Marie Curie quoted in
Madame Curie: A Biography, 1937