

hyperopia

The image of an object is formed behind the retina due to a defect in the light rays' convergence as they pass through the lens. This makes near objects hard to see.

convex lens

Corrects hyperopia by causing light rays emanating from an object to converge and project an image onto the focus of the retina.

