

THE SOUTH SKY

The centre of this map marks the spot that would be directly overhead if you were standing at the South Pole. No stars mark this centre point but the bright constellation of Crux is used as a main point of reference in the southern skies.

