

Glaciers

A glacier is a huge river of ice that forms when thick layers of snow fall on top of each other and are pressed together. Most glaciers form high up in mountains, where it's so cold that any snowfall never melts. They are found all around the world, usually in polar and mountainous regions.