

The cells in your body can't survive without a continual supply of oxygen from the air. Your lungs take in air with every breath, bringing oxygen to your blood to be carried around the body.

