

Your life began as a single cell—no bigger than a pinprick—inside your mother's body. Over time, that cell grew and developed into your complex body containing trillions of cells.

