Psychologists claim that up to two-thirds of communication between people is nonverbal.

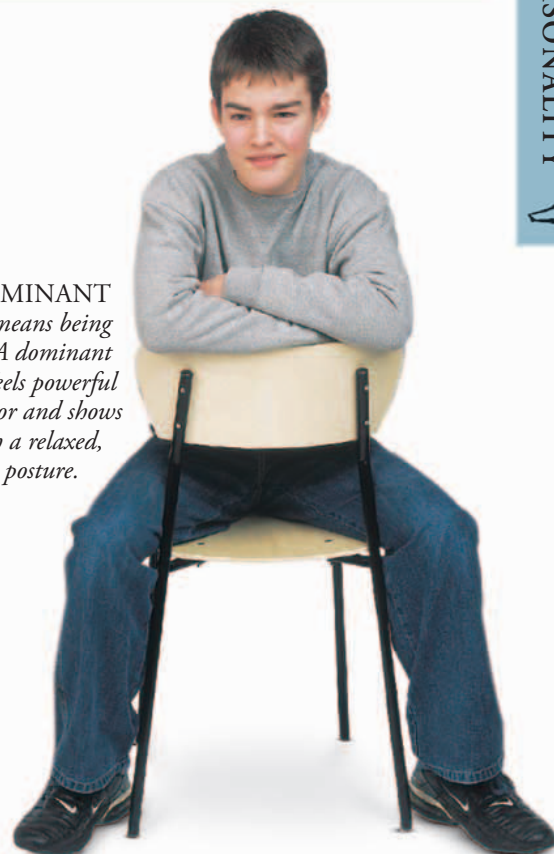

► SUBMISSIVE

Hiding the hands, standing still, and looking down are ways of showing you're submissive (not in charge). Submissive is the opposite of dominant.

◄ DEFENSIVE

A cautious or anxious person feels defensive and may instinctively protect themselves with folded arms and crossed legs.

► DOMINANT

Dominant means being in charge. A dominant person feels powerful or superior and shows it with a relaxed, confident posture.

SPOT THE FAKE SMILE

A real, emotional smile happens automatically and sends out a message of happiness and welcome. It spreads across the face and makes the mouth widen and the skin around the eyes wrinkle. A fake smile appears and ends quickly, widening the mouth without any real feeling. See if you can tell which of these six smiles are real.

1, 2, and 4 are fake smiles; 3, 5, and 6 are real.

GESTURES

Some types of body language, such as a smile, have exactly the same meaning all over the world and in every culture. But other signs, from nods and winks to bows and hand gestures, vary in meaning from place to place. For example, two fingers in a V-shape means "victory" in some places but "peace" in others. In England, showing a V with the back of the hand is a rude gesture meaning "get lost!"
