

BIRD FLU VIRUS

This electron microscope image shows the bird flu virus magnified 500,000 times. The virus is found in wild birds but can also infect humans, causing a deadly form of influenza. Each virus consists of little more than a packet of genes in a protein shell (pink) and an envelope of fat (orange).

