

Gold reserves

The central banks of the world's nations store gold to back up their currencies. The Federal Reserve in the US has the largest gold reserves. There are also international gold reserves, such as those held by the International Monetary Fund.

